Android Picture in Picture (PiP) mode is a special feature that lets you watch a video in a small overlay window at the corner of the screen as you hop from app to app. This way, you can binge watch Netflix, or search for something on Google while casually chatting with a friend on a different app. The feature, which is mostly used for video playback, is found in Android smartphones running Android Oreo and later versions of the operating system. We'll explain how Android picture in picture mode works and how to use it on your smartphone or tablet. How Picture in Picture Works PiP is a convenient feature that comes in handy when you start watching a video on a compatible app and want to multitask. When you tap the home button on your phone, the video will shrink into a thumbnail view, which remains docked on your screen. This way, you can continue watching your video while using other apps with PiP turned on. Plus, you can zoom in or out and adjust to different sizes depending on what you're doing on the phone. If the window is getting in the way, you can drag or swipe it to different parts of the screen to dock the thumbnail and continue playing on top of other apps. The audio will still continue to play and you can use the tab to pull the window out again. Android's Picture in Picture mode isn't compatible with all apps but you can check the app developer's site to find out whether the program supports this function. Some of the apps that support PiP mode include Google Chrome, YouTube Premium, Google Maps, YouTube TV, Netflix, Google Movies & TV, Facebook, Instagram, WhatsApp (video chats), Google Duo, VLC, Hulu, and Pocket Casts (video podcasts). Before using the Android PiP mode, check that all your Android apps are up to date and then take the steps below to enable picture in picture mode. Note: If your device is running Android Oreo (8.0) and above, PiP mode is enabled by default. For this guide, we used an Android phone running Android Pie. Go to Settings on your phone. Tap Apps or Apps & Notifications depending on your device. Select the app for which you want to enable PiP (in older Android versions, select Advanced). Tap to toggle the Allow Permission option to enable PiP. How to Launch Android Picture in Picture on Different Apps Depending on the app, you can launch picture-in-picture mode on your Android device by playing a video and pressing the home button. How to Use PiP Mode in Google Chrome Browser If you're using Google Chrome browser, go to the website that contains the video you want to watch. Open the video and set it to full screen. Note: This also works for YouTube videos you watch in Chrome. Select Play, and then press Home button to launch the video in PiP mode. Drag the video around your phone's screen and dock it where you want so you can use other apps while watching the video. To close the video, drag the thumbnail view down the bottom of your screen to dismiss it. How to Use PiP Mode in YouTube For YouTube Premium (formerly YouTube Red), start a video and then press the Home button to launch picture-in-picture mode. YouTube Premium users scan also set the YouTube app to default to background play instead of PiP. This way, you can watch videos when the screen is off or while using other apps. To enable Background play in YouTube Premium, open Settings, go to Background & Downloads. You'll see three options to choose from: Always on: Your videos will always play in the backgroundHeadphones or external speakers: Your videos will only play in the background when you connect an external audio output to your phoneOff: Your videos won't play in the background Note: You can watch videos on the free YouTube app in thumbnail view while multitasking by using the Pop-up view or Split screen view. To use the pop-up or split screen view in the free YouTube app, go to your Recently opened apps view. Find YouTube, downpress the app icon and select open in pop-up view or open in split-screen view. The difference between using PiP mode and using the pop-up or split-screen view is that the latter doesn't dock to your screen. This means that if you close all the apps you're using, the thumbnail view will be closed and you have to open it again to resume watching. How to Use PiP Mode in Facebook If you're using the Facebook app, you can watch videos in PiP mode on your phone while using other apps. To do this, open the video you want to watch on Facebook and tap on the little square at the top left corner of the video to minimize the window. Your video will shrink in size and you can move it to either of the four corners of your screen. How to Use PiP Mode in VLC You can also enable PiP in VLC via the app's settings. To do this, tap More (three dots) at the bottom right side of the screen. Next, tap Settings at the top left side of the thumbnail view to open the controls, and then tap the X in the upper right corner of the mini player. Alternatively, drag the thumbnail view and drag the PiP player off the bottom of your phone's screen. How to Disable Android Picture in Picture Mode for Android Apps To disable PiP, go to your device's Settings > Apps. Tap the three dots to open the Apps menu and select Special access. Select Picture-in-picture. Next, select the app for which you want to disable PiP and tap the toggle to switch it off. Image: Work and Play on Your Android Device If you multitask a lot on your Android device, hopping from one app to another, you'll find the Android Picture in Picture (PiP) mode very convenient. Were you able to enter Picture in Picture mode on your Android device? Share with us in the comments. Android Oreo finally adds a picture-in-picture, or PiP, mode for video apps. Apps need to be updated to support the capability, but the necessary changes are relatively simple. Right now, YouTube, VLC, and Chrome support picture-in-picture, but now that Oreo is rolling out to devices, other major video apps shouldn't be far behind. (Image credit: Google)Each app may use a slightly different process to open a PiP window. For example, Chrome requires you to watch a video in fullscreen mode, while YouTube does it whenever any video is playing. VLC requires you to tap the menu button during video playback and select the PiP option. But the the controls once you invoke the floating window are the same.MORE: How to Get Android OreoHere's how to make the most of Android Oreo's Picture-in-Picture feature. For our example we'll use Chrome, as most video apps are likely to work this same way.1. Start watching any video in Chrome and press the button to watch full screen. In other apps, like YouTube, you don't even have to view the video full screen, just start playing any video.2. Tap the home button to return to the home screen.3. The video will play in a small window in the lower right. You can keep using your phone as normal.4. Tap the little window to slightly expand it and show play controls. Tap the window again, and you return the app that is playing it.5. You can drag the PiP window around to any other point along the edges of the screen. If you release it somewhere in the middle, the window will snap to the closest valid location.6. To dismiss the window, simply drag it off the bottom of the screen. If you thought your silly selfies, embarrassing videos or naughty photos were safe with Snapchat -- think again. Since the quick-hit chat service launched earlier this year, there have been numerous apps that let you save Snapchats without the sender knowing. As it turns out, a few hackers and developers have learned that Snapchat doesn't actually delete images after they've been seen; it simply hides them so that apps can't access them. The Snapchat app always alerts the sender if the receiver screenshots their message, but that scenario can easily be avoided with an app. There are a few apps and methods of saving Snapchat photos, but we found this one to be the easiest and most effective. Here's how to get started on any Android device.1. Download the SnapCapture app from the Google Play store. 2. Enter your Snapchat username and password the first time you open the app. 3. Open SnapCapture the next time you receive a SnapChat message. DO NOT open the message in SnapChat first. SnapCapture only saves unopened messages.4. Tap the Download button in the upper right corner of the app. This will download any unopened SnapChat messages and display them in the app.5. Check your Android phone's Gallery app. There should now be a folder in there called SnapCapture. You know what's not cool? Having that default block letter as a contact picture for your favorite contacts in your phone. They're your favorites! Your besties, your husband or wife, even your kids. C'mon guys, they deserve better than the first letter of their first name. It's up to you to make this right. But don't fret—we're here to help. It's kinda what we do. Before we get started, it's worth pointing out that this process may vary slightly between manufacturers. Since all the big ones—Samsung, LG, Huawei, etc.—all do their own thing where the dialer is concerned, it may look slightly different depending on what model you're using. Fortunately, it's pretty easy to figure out what to do once you get started, because the contacts portion of most dialers isn't that different. Okay, ready? Let's do this thing. The first thing you'll want to do is open the dialer (also known as the "Phone" app). From there, just find the contact you'd like to add/change the picture for. This is the part where things may vary depending on your handset. On most phones, you tap the picture itself to open the contact card. The primary exemption here is in the Favorites list on Samsung and Stock Android phones: tapping the image will call the contact. You'll need to tap the little "i" on Samsung phones, or the three-dot overflow menu button on stock phones. In the full contact list, however, you can still just tap the picture. It's stupid, really. Once on the contact card page, hit the "Edit" button—it may say the word "edit," or it may just be a pencil icon. Either way, it should be in the upper right corner. Out of the phones I tested, the Huawei Honor 5X was the only one that had it in a different place—it's at the bottom. Still, it should be pretty clear which icon to tap. This is the menu where you can edit everything dealing with that particular contact, not just the picture. But changing the image is pretty easy: just tap it. Tapping the picture will open an edit menu where you can take a new picture or select one from the Gallery; then crop it to your liking. Once chosen, it will show up in the contact's card. When you're done, just hit "Save"—the new image should sync across all your Android devices. While Android's openness is easily one of its biggest strengths, it's also what makes simple things like changing a contact picture a more convoluted process than it should be since it doesn't work the same way across devices. Fortunately, it isn't that difficult regardless of manufacturer UI, especially once you've done it at least once.
